

Professor sits in a dignified manner, calm and assured in how he postures himself.

PROFESSOR

I don't consider it my job to teach my students a definitive right or wrong, black or white, left or right. In life there are so many paths one can take it's not possible to boil it down to a single correct decision. As much as we live in a world where everything must be labelled or given its own category, it's important to remember that the choice itself remains with the individual.

He adjusts himself for comfort without losing any poise.

PROFESSOR (CONT'D)

Philosophy by its very nature is an expression of ideas and belief. What sort of lecturer would I be if I didn't do everything I could to allow each of my students to develop their own philosophy, challenge each others, and guide them not necessarily to make the right choice - but to make their own.

He reflects on his own words, a soft chuckle.

PROFESSOR

If I had let my life be dictated by other people who know where I would be - but I promise you, it certainly wouldn't be here.
